Great organizations know where they going and have the discipline to stay focused on what’s important. They anticipate, spot trends and adapt fast. They ask the right questions and get things done. They are places where talented employees are given a chance to do what they do best. Yet as good as they are, they take nothing for granted and continuously track progress towards their goals. They learn from failures, stay close to their customers, and keep watch on their competitors. And everything they do, they do with passion and unwavering integrity.

It’s not so much what they do, it’s HOW they do it.

There are no shortcuts when it comes to high performance but one thing is certain, all of these organizations communicate exceptionally well. They have candid conversations every day about what is working and what they need to work on. They face challenges head-on and create opportunities to find new solutions to old problems.

The 2005 Employee Survey started this conversation among Kent city employees. The results in this report provide a snapshot of what Kent’s employees think they do well and what needs to improve. This data sets the bar for 2005 and gives the organization something to shoot for in 2006.
THE SURVEY
In October work surveys were made available to all full-time city employees (185). Over the course of the next 2 months 64 surveys were returned, representing a response rate of 35%. As a voluntary survey, the 35% response rate was considered a good turn-out for a first time effort.

The survey had 36 multiple choice questions that were divided into 6 categories: 1) Leadership; 2) Strategy; 3) Metrics; 4) People; 5) Processes; and 6) Culture. These categories match-up with the Ohio Excellence Award criteria recognizing those functions that exceptional organizations consistently perform.

OVERALL RESULTS
In reviewing the answers to the questions by category, the Work Culture group had the lowest combined score (64/100) while the Leadership group came out on top (73/100). But with less than 2 percentage points separating the scores for 5 of the 6 categories, there was nothing to indicate a particular problem trend with any one category; they all have room for improvement.

The Leadership category included both the highest score for any question in the survey at 91/100 (employee pride in work) and a low of 56/100 for another question (is information shared). This suggests that while leadership shows signs of strength there is still work to be done in the fulfillment of leadership function.

Overall, the categories were tightly bunched around an average of 66/100 with the average range between high and low scores across all the categories at 19 percentage points. The fairly high range result suggests inconsistent performance within the organization functions that must improve.

THE HIGHS
Employee pride in their work topped the list with a 91/100 score and organizational trust was rated good.

THE LOWS
Employees perceive a low tolerance for trying new things and taking risks with the organization itself viewed at times as an impediment to progress. Communication is also rated low.

THE MIDDLE
Most employees rate their supervisors as fair and professional, and they feel that they make a difference in serving Kent residents. The employees demonstrate an appreciation for customer service, data management, and the generally feel valued for what they do.

COMPARING THE DATA
With an average of 66/100, how does Kent compare to other organizations? Surveys of private sector, federal government and 2 other cities suggests that Kent is fairly typical with a first year score right in the middle of the pack. It should be noted that Coral Springs, Florida also started with ratings in the low 70’s so Kent has every reason to believe that it can improve its results in the years to come.

WHY IMPROVE? Employee satisfaction and customer satisfaction have been found to be directly correlated, so improving employee satisfaction not only means better performance but also happier customers – which is what our business is all about.
